Coulson's Life and Work

Andrew Coulson was born in 1947 in New York City. He attended public schools and graduated from Harvard College in 1969. After college, Coulson worked as a teacher and a journalist. In 1975, he founded the National Association for the Advancement of Home Education (NAHE), which is now the largest homeschooling organization in the United States.

Coulson was a prolific writer and speaker. He wrote over 20 books and hundreds of articles about educational freedom. He also testified before Congress and state legislatures on numerous occasions.

Coulson's work has helped to shape the debate over educational freedom. He has been a strong advocate for school choice, vouchers, and homeschooling. He has also been a vocal critic of the Common Core State Standards and other government-mandated educational reforms.

Coulson's Legacy

Andrew Coulson passed away in 2019 at the age of 72. He left behind a legacy of scholarship, activism, and inspiration. Coulson's ideas continue to be debated and discussed today, and his work continues to inspire parents, educators, and policymakers around the world.

The Debate Over Educational Freedom

The debate over educational freedom is a complex one. There are many different perspectives on the issue, and there is no easy answer. However, Coulson's work provides a valuable starting point for understanding the issue.

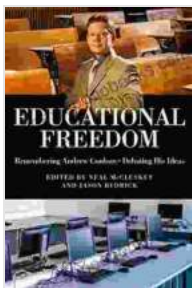

Coulson believed that parents should have the right to choose the best education for their children. He argued that this right is essential for the preservation of individual liberty and the flourishing of a free society.

Opponents of educational freedom argue that it would lead to a two-tiered system of education, with the wealthy having access to better schools than the poor. They also argue that it would undermine the quality of public education.

The debate over educational freedom is likely to continue for many years to come. However, Coulson's work provides a valuable framework for understanding the issue. His ideas offer a powerful defense of the right of parents to choose the best education for their children.
