

Victims of Elder Fraud: Protect Yourself and Your Loved Ones from Financial Predators

Elder fraud is a growing problem in the United States, with seniors losing billions of dollars each year to scams. These scams can take many forms, from phony investment schemes to fake charities to identity theft.

Seniors are often targeted by fraudsters because they are more likely to be trusting and less likely to be aware of the latest scams. They may also be more vulnerable to financial exploitation because they are more likely to have savings and investments.

If you are a senior, it is important to be aware of the risks of elder fraud and to take steps to protect yourself. Here are some tips:

- Never give out your personal information over the phone, email, or text message unless you are sure who you are dealing with.
- Be wary of any unsolicited offers of money or prizes.
- Do not send money to someone you do not know.
- Be cautious about investing in any scheme that promises high returns with little risk.
- Get help from a trusted family member or friend if you are unsure about something.

If you think you have been the victim of elder fraud, report it to the police immediately. You can also contact the National Council on Aging's Elder Fraud Helpline at 855-613-7226.

In addition to the tips above, there are a number of resources available to help seniors avoid elder fraud. These resources include:

- The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) has a website dedicated to elder fraud, which includes information on how to avoid scams and report fraud.
- The National Council on Aging (NCOA) has a number of resources on elder fraud, including a toll-free helpline and a website with information on how to avoid scams.
- The AARP has a website dedicated to elder fraud, which includes information on how to avoid scams and report fraud.

By being aware of the risks of elder fraud and taking steps to protect yourself, you can help to keep your hard-earned money safe.
