The Army is organized into three main components: the Regular Army, the Army National Guard, and the Army Reserve. The Regular Army is the active-duty component of the Army, and it is responsible for providing the nation with a ready and deployable force. The Army National Guard is a reserve component of the Army, and it is made up of citizen-soldiers who train part-time. The Army Reserve is another reserve component of the Army, and it is made up of citizen-soldiers who train part-time and are available for active duty in times of need.

The Army has a wide range of missions, including:

- Defending the United States from attack
- Carrying out military operations around the globe
- Providing humanitarian aid and disaster relief
- Supporting other government agencies

The Army is also a major provider of training and education. The Army offers a variety of training programs for its soldiers, including:

- Basic Combat Training
- Advanced Individual Training
- Officer Candidate School
- Sergeants Major Academy

The Army also offers a variety of educational opportunities for its soldiers, including:

- Associate's degrees
- Bachelor's degrees
